Poem of the Month

Look For The Good

In the New Year, let's resolve to get less stressed, upset, anxious about things over which we have no control.
Let's have a narrower focus on our lives,
loving and helping our family and friends,
making our community a better place to live,
to create peace and contentment.

In the New Year, let's resolve
to pay less attention to depressing stories on TV, in magazines and newspapers, and to stop focusing on what we want
that we haven't got,
instead of appreciating
the many blessings we do have.

In the New Year, let's look for the good.
We may have to search through a mass of negative media,
but the good is there,
all around us.

I wish for you a New Year filled with good,
engulfed in serenity and happiness!

Martin Luther King, Jr. Memorial 1964 Independence Ave. SW, Washington, D.C.

Located in downtown Washington, DC, the memorial honors Martin Luther King, Jr.'s legacy and the struggle for freedom, equality, and justice. A prominent leader in the modern civil rights movement, Dr. King was a tireless advocate for racial equality, working class, and the oppressed around the world.

Building the Memorial

In 1996, Congress authorized Martin Luther King, Jr.'s fraternity, Alpha Phi Alpha, to establish a Memorial to him in Washington, DC. The Martin Luther King, Jr. National Memorial Project Foundation held a design competition and identified the Tidal Basin site for the memorial's location.

For the design competition, entrants' registration materials contained ten posters with images and chronology of Dr. King's life, information about the memorial's site in DC, and the Foundation's vision for the memorial. Each prospective designer submitted three 24" x 36" display boards to an international panel of artists, historians, and architects. A total of 906 entrants joined the competition. Jurors only knew the registration number of each entry, not the names of the entrants. After three days, the panel narrowed the submissions down to 23 finalists. Unable to reach a decision, the jury asked the 23 finalists to submit a fourth board.

In 2000, the judges selected ROMA Design Group's plan for a stone with Dr. King's image emerging from a mountain. The plan's theme referenced a line from King's 1963 "I Have a Dream" speech: "With this faith, we will be able to hew out of the mountain of despair a stone of hope." The final design includes a massive carved mountain with a slice pulled out of it, symbolizing the "Stone of Hope" being hewn from the "Mountain of Despair." Reinforcing this motif, the edges of the Stone of Hope and the Mountain of Despair incorporate scrape marks to symbolize the struggle and movement, as well as an engraving of the words "Out of the mountain of despair, a stone of hope." Visitors may enter the memorial through the Mountain of Despair and tour the memorial reflecting on the struggle that Dr. King faced during his life, approaching the plaza where the Stone of Hope stands. In the stone, a carving of Dr. King gazes to the horizon, thoughtful and resolute.

Creating the Sculpture

To create the likeness of Dr. King, the Foundation searched for a sculptor. Their search led them to St. Paul, MN, where an international collection of sculptors were creating public artwork to be installed throughout the city. After approaching all fifteen artists, they found that four of them recommended the Chinese artist Master Lei Yixin. After the Foundation interviewed him in Washington, DC, and examined his work in China, Master Lei Yixin became the official sculptor in 2007.

Lei filled the walls of his studio with hundreds of photographs of Dr. King, and studied them until he held the essence of the man's spirit firmly in his mind. He created a three-foot scale model of the sculpture amongst other sculpture models, before sculpting the 30-foot final version. Along the way, Lei worked closely with the Foundation and the King family to choose the material — shrimp pink granite — and to generate the likeness reflected in the final product.

A 30 foot fiberglass replica of the entire sculpture served as a reference for the stone sculpture. The sculpture and the mountain are composed of 159 granite blocks that were transported to Master Lei's studio in Changsha, China, where he assembled and sculpted 80 percent of the artwork. It was then disassembled and transported by ship to Baltimore, and reassembled at the memorial. Master Lei completed the last 20 percent of the sculpting on site in Washington, D.C.

Nick Benson and his team completed the text engravings that captured King's words. Benson, a third generation stone carver, spent more than two years on the project. His company, The John Stevens Shop, is located in Newport, Rhode Island. He is both a designer and a carver, with distinctive architectural lettering that is an original font drawing on both classical Greek forms and contemporary sans serif script. His other engraving works include the World War II Memorial, the Franklin D. Roosevelt Four Freedoms Park on Roosevelt Island, and the National Gallery of Art.

Symbolism

Each part of the memorial is significant and symbolic. From the looming Mountain of Despair, a Stone of Hope surges forward as the focal point for the memorial. This references a line in King's speech, "With this faith, we will be able to hew out of the mountain of despair a stone of hope." There, the striking likeness of Dr. King captured him in a moment of reflective thought, determined and resolute. The detachment of the Stone of Hope from the Mountain of Despair symbolizes victory borne from disappointment. A wall of quotes spanning Dr. King's long civil rights career represents his ideals of peace, democracy, justice, and love. As much as the quotes acknowledge the history of the civil rights struggle in America, they can continue to serve as inspiration to others fighting for civil rights around the globe.

The memorial's location is also significant, enhancing the core of the "city beautiful" that Pierre L'Enfant envisioned in 1791, and the McMillan Plan expanded in 1901. The plans aimed to create an entire city to remind us "what we should be trying to achieve as a nation, as a society [and] as human beings on this planet." For the "I Have a Dream" speech, King stood on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial and referenced the Declaration of Independence, penned by Thomas Jefferson. King leveraged the power of place to appeal to core American values that all Americans held dear, highlighting the injustice perpetuated by segregation. The Martin Luther King, Jr. Memorial's location along the line connecting the Thomas Jefferson and Lincoln Memorials helps to reinforce the connection between these three leaders at three important moments for civil rights in our nation's history: from the promise that "all men are created equal," to the freeing of the slaves, to the final push for full and equal rights.

Drum Major Quote Controversy

Upon opening in 2011, the memorial immediately faced controversy due to a paraphrased quote inscribed on the Stone of Hope: "I was a drum major for justice, peace and righteousness." The inscription sparked controversy when author and poet Maya Angelou said it made King "look like an arrogant twit." King's original words from a February 4, 1968 sermon at Ebenezer Baptist Church in Atlanta were, "If you want to say that I was a drum major, say that I was a drum major for justice. Say that I was a drum major for peace. I was a drum major for righteousness. And all of the other shallow things will not matter."

The sermon largely dealt with the theme of the danger of the personal ego driving people and nations to live beyond their means and seek attention and supremacy to negative ends, closing with Martin Luther King asking his congregation to turn that desire to stand out — to be a drum major — into service to others. In the sermon, King wished aloud not to be remembered for his awards and education, but that he "tried to give his life serving others," and that he "tried to love and serve humanity."

The message of selflessness embodied in the sermon seemed to be at odds with what was captured on the memorial.

On December 11, 2012, Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar announced his decision to remove the controversial quote by carving striations over the words, which would blend in with the existing artwork. In 2013, sculptor Lei Yixin returned to modify the memorial and remove the quote. The paraphrased quote is no longer visible.

Scaffolding encloses the Stone of Hope for the removal of the controversial "Drum Major" quote, August 1, 2013.

Author Julia MacDonnell, will be at our senior center to speak about her latest book.

When Julia MacDonnell's relinquished son found her just a few years after Massachusetts opened its sealed adoption records to adult adoptees, she was jubilant. Not only would he forgive her for signing away her parental rights to him nearly a half century before, he'd join his much younger half-siblings in a big happy blended family. She'd be able, at long last, to emerge from the secret that had controlled more than two thirds of her life. But that is not what happened.

Hidden Girls: A Birth Mother's Story of Reunion and Reckoning brings readers into the emotional heart of adoption loss, showing how the secrets and silence of closed adoption permanently twist kinship histories and undermine the compassion of those involved in it.

MacDonnell, the award-winning author of two novels and a collection of short stories, was astounded when the son she'd relinquished as a teenager reached out to her via email after nearly 50 years. Mad with grief when they took him away, she'd kept the secret required by her parents in order to come back home. She'd accepted this humiliation and degradation as a kind of penance, a necessary offering. That is, until her son's sudden and unexpected reappearance in her life.

Hearing Loss and Dementia

Wednesday, January 22

Hearing Loss Is a Modifiable Risk Factor of Dementia

As we age, the risk for dementia increases. When we get older, our brains “shrink” a process that is known as brain atrophy – also known as cognitive decline or dementia.

The Connection

It has long been suspected that untreated hearing loss can increase the risk of cognitive decline and dementia. When left untreated, hearing loss makes it difficult for the brain to hear and retain information. When this occurs, it can leave you feeling fatigued, forgetful, and more likely to withdraw from social situations. Hearing loss is becoming increasingly common in people of all ages, but adults over the age of 60 are more susceptible. A recent study has shown that older adults who wear hearing aids can likely reduce their risk of dementia in half compared to those who don't manage their hearing loss. *

While hearing aids are not a cure, they can help you hear better, maintain communication, and can increase brain health. There is no down side to wearing hearing aids, so it's best to consult with a hearing specialist sooner rather than later.

Stay Safe and Informed: Alert Systems for Seniors

Thursday, January 16
10:30am

As we age, the need for safety and peace of mind becomes even more critical. Emergency alert systems are designed to provide a quick response when help is needed, whether due to a fall, sudden illness, or any other emergency. These systems allow seniors to easily call for assistance at the push of a button, helping them feel more independent and secure at home or while out and about.

We invite you to join us for a special session where we'll dive into the different types of alert systems available, how they work, and why they're an essential tool for seniors.
